NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent,

NEW YORK March 17, 1870. Mr. Bergh Can Stand It No Longer. Mr. Henry Bergh, President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, has committed the blunder of bringing a libel suit against a certain New York newspaper which contained a rather funny, but by no means scurrilous, article with regard to him. The newspaper gave extracts from a supposititious diary purporting to have been written by Bergh, and filled with tearful lamentations over brokenlegged poedles and imprisoned cats. For Mr. Bergh's own sake I am sorry that he has committed this indiscretion. He is such a good man and such a nice man, and has so patiently borne such a number of small spitefulnesses and affronts, that it is a pity he did not hold out in his martyrdom to the bitter end. Or had he chosen to take fire upon a larger occasion, he would not have shown himself in so ridiculous a light. But unfortunately he is one of those men who, having schooled themselves to the performance of a disagreeable task and the endurance of a long series of petty injuries, byand-by take offense at some trifle and visit upon it the accumulated wrath which would have been the just retribution of greater insults that have been allowed to pass unnoticed. The newspaper against which Mr. Bergh brings his present charge certainly deserves no very great degree of notice in what it says. At worst it is coarse fun, and bears no appearance of having been uttered with any stronger motive than the amusement of a set of readers whose taste for wit is not of the most delicate order. Eillel Feeling

An interesting youth named Michael Hallohan, aged about eighteen, has just been sentenced by Judge Bedford to nine years and six months imprisonment, on a charge of attempting to murder his father. The father bears the appearance of extreme age, and the testimony he gives is that the youth attacked him with a razor, and cut him dangerously about the neck and breast. The provocation upon which the assault was made was a rebuke administered by the father for intoxication upon the part of the son. After committing the attack, the promising boy, desiring probably to give artistic completeness to the affair, called upon an undertaker and informed him that the "old man was dead," and ordered a coffin. This was doing the thing handsomely, at any rate. In fact, young Mr. Hallohan did the thing so very handsomely, and exhibited such exultation in his handiwork, that Judge Bedford saw no other resource than that of committing him to the State Prison for the next ten years, less six months.

Another instance of fillal feeling of a very different kind is that exhibited by a little girl whose mother was sentenced in the Court of General Sessions to imprisonment for one year on being found guilty of extensive larcenies. The husband is a very respectable resident of this city; the child is pretty, intelligent, and affectionate; the family was a united and happy one, and not even the kusband seems to have had a knowledge of his wife's surreptitious "doings." An accident brought one of her peccadilloes to light, whereupon she voluntarily confessed the whole of them to one of the officers, and was brought up on eight different indictments. It requires a nicer moral eye than most of our courts possess to draw the line of demarcation between robbery and kleptomania.

The Haunted Heater. A funny ghost story, which has not made its way as yet into any of the New York newspapers, and which affects somewhat the character of an up-town boarding-house, has crept to my ears. The house is a four-story one, and until very recently the third-story front room was occupied by a young married couple, who would have been happy in the possession of a six-months' old baby if they had not regarded the baby as an incumbrance, and wanted to get rid of it. The husband was a clerk in a store, and probably did not get a salary of more than thirty dollars per week. Although married, he had not given up his love of balls and parties, theatres and clubs. The wife was a giddy thing, fond of ringing as many changes as possible upon the rather small stock of dresses she possessed. She also was fond of evening diversions, loved to shop, to gossip, to pay visits, entertain her friends, and spend her husband's money. Between the two, poor baby had a very hard time. The father used to swear at it, and the mother used to beat it, and the poor little thing was very much abused and neglected. After awhile, as might be expected, it gave up the ghost, and was buried by the hypocritical parents, who managed to screw out a tear over the little coffin. Then apiece came the retribution. After the funeweak-minded mother was so the affected with nervous terrors that she declared she could no longer sleep in the room where baby had died. So she and her husband emigrated to the fourth-story front room, the one immediately over the third story, the latter, in the lack of any other boarders willing to occupy it, being devoted to darkness and desolation. At length, upon the midnight succeeding the day of the funeral, when the whole house was wrapped in profound repose, the unhappy couple in the fourth-story front room heard sounds of a peculiar character proceeding apparently from the unoccupied room below. With ears pricked up and hair erect, they listened. Yes! sure enough-those sounds were the plaintive wails of a young infant; now small and remote as a smaller echo, now loud and painful, and occasionally rising into an agonized shrick which it seemed all the house must hear. With the cold perspiration standing in beads upon themthey would have commenced counting them had they been good Catholics-the guilty father and mother first sought to shut out the sounds by rolling themselves together beneath the bed-clothes. In vain. The ghostly walling of their dead and ill-used child continued to be heard, and at last, getting up in the desperation of the moment, the father plainly heard a baby's shrill cry pealing plaintively through the register. There was no doubt about it; it came from the room below. Beside the register there it had been the custom of his wife and self to sit warming themselves. while their systematic ill-treatment of the child was going on. And this was to be their punish-leave, and made her acquainted with the reason. "Why, it's only the cat!" explained that lady. "The poor thing got locked up there yesterday somehow, and was squalling all night long!" ALI BABA.

BEUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

The City Amusements. AT THE CHESNUT From From will be re-pented this evening, with Miss Keene in the lead-ing role. This play is certainly one of the most perfect pictures of Parisian society that has been produced of late years, and it is easy to account for the sensation that it created in the French capital. The moral of the tale, however, is as applicable here as it is in Paris, and we commend Frou-Frou to all who can appreciate elegant dramatic writing and life-like portraitures of character. Miss Keene has placed the piece on the stage in a style that deserves hearty praise. The scenery is elegant and appropriate, and all the appointments are in the best taste. AT THE WALNUT Mr. Fechter will appear tels evening as "Claude Melnotte" in Bulwer's drama of The Lady of Lyons.

The same bill will be repeated to-morrow, and Mr. Fechter will make his last appearance at a matinee on Saturday, when he will personate "Ruy Blas.
